

Reflection on The 6th Next-Generation Global Workshop

TRAN Giang Linh, Institute for Social Development Studies, Vietnam

The workshop provide good opportunities for young researchers to practice to present their research and create academic networks. Most commentators gave insightful comments. Just a few commentators do not have relevant background related to the papers. Hence they did not really understand the papers. The themes are broad. Some papers did not fit with the themes.

Because of strict time management for presentations, we could have quite enough time for discussions. The organizing the conference was great together with beautifully printed-out program and travel information.

I found family and migration very relevant to and useful for my work. Other papers also help broaden my knowledge on cross cultural issues and multi-discipline. The workshop is related to my institution. My institution would like to create networks or partnership with other institutions all over the world. Also it wants to learn experiences regarding doing research from other scholars. Most useful aspect of the workshop is to broaden academic international networks and to have good opportunities for young researchers to practice. Sessions on family, migration and gender sexuality was very useful. Comments from commentators and audience were also useful.
